

May I have the envelope please?

- A Postal Service employee may accept an award for public service or achievement, if certain conditions are met.
- For example, you may not accept an award from a person or organization that has interests that may be substantially affected by your official duties.

Accepting an award for public service that complies with ethics regulations maintains the Postal Service's reputation for trustworthiness, which keeps our customers coming back.

And that's smart business.

Contact the Ethics Office (ethics.help@usps.gov) for guidance.
