

Safety Orientation

Spread the safety knowledge.

All postal employees, including non-career employees, must receive a general safety and health orientation and sufficient on-the-job training. The training must include site-specific safety rules, specific job safety analyses, required OSHA programs, emergency evacuation procedures and OSHA rights and responsibilities.

This training enables employees to follow safe work practices, recognize hazards and understand the benefits of a safety-focused workplace.

And that's smart safety!

For additional information or guidance, contact your safety office.