

Safety and Health Inspections

Pass or fail?

Safety and health inspections target specific operational, facility or program deficiencies that could cause accidents, injuries and illnesses. The inspections also foster compliance with OSHA regulations and standards. At the conclusion of an inspection, safety employees must meet with the installation head and union representatives who accompanied the inspection team to advise them of deficiencies disclosed by the inspection.

Deficiencies noted in the inspection must be posted in a prominent location readily available to all employees.

And that's smart safety!

For additional information or guidance, contact your safety office.